

The Leadership in Global Markets Series Presents

The Fracturing of American Business and Politics

Friday, September 6th, 2019

3:30-5:00pm

Moore School of Business, RM 136

Register at: <https://markmizruchi.eventbrite.com>

Mark Mizruchi

Robert Cooley Angell Collegiate Professor of Sociology & Barger Family Professor of Organizational Studies at the University of Michigan

Winner of prestigious book awards from The Academy of Management and the American Sociological Association

Praise for his recent book:

“Mizruchi shows that in the postwar years, corporate leaders, whatever their weaknesses, put their heads together when the going got tough and came up with political solutions. The system was not altogether democratic, but it resulted in effective problem solving, and a means of bringing the powerful together to pursue the nation’s common goals. That system has fallen apart.”

— Frank Dobbin, Harvard University

“A striking interpretation of our present economic and political plight.”

— Charles Perrow, Yale University

“Mizruchi describes a business elite that has become fragmented, irrelevant, and powerless to solve the problems— like mounting national debt, decaying infrastructure, and failing schools—that, in the long-term, will hurt the vested interests of corporate America.”

— Chrystia Freeland, Democracy

Sponsored by:

The Rachel and Jim Hodges Fund

and

The Folks Center for International Business

with The Rule of Law Collaborative & The Walker Institute